The evideices on all sides, point to a shortage in the supply of horses, such as are required to carry on the necessary horse power of the business and commercial Mairs of trade, in every day life. It is folly to think that the time is near at hand when horse power will be dispensed with through automobile means.

The horse is the safest, surest, most economical power to use in short hauls and local transfer of merchandise that can be had. The compact, sturdy, reliable draft horse accommodates himself to all kinds of conditions that are possible to come up in the line of labor in which his lot is cast. It is very seldom that he is disabled or required to go to the shop for repairs. He is not outclassed and every year rendered valueless by some little improvement or patent gotten out that aids in operation and application of power.
